

An Army Reviewed by a Lion
The author of a recent work on Algeria relates the following incident, which occurred while marching with the army of French troops on their way to attack the Kabyles:
We had ridden carelessly forward, admiring the view, or speculating on the game to be found in those mountain passes, when the sudden halt and the unsisting of carbines started us. Pushing past the rear guard, we galloped to the front just in time to prevent the soldiers, who led the advance, firing at a noble lion, who, advancing toward the same path where we were pursuing, had halted abruptly at our view. He had evidently come from a different direction to the one we were pursuing, and was making to the very pile of mountains whose some colors had excited our curiosity. Five minutes later, and we should have seen him, but, as it happened, there he stood, evidently very much astonished at this plunging suddenly on so large a party. We were to fire, we should doubtless either kill or wound the animal. In the first case, all would be well and we should be the richer by a lion's skin; in the second place, we should be sure to lose one or more men, and it was responsible for the safety of the army that we should not assume. Hastily giving the order to unsling the carbines, he closed up the men with some difficulty, for the horses were very restive. In case the lion showed a disposition to attack, all were to face toward him, and it was to be hoped that the general discharge would prove mortal. If disposed to let us do so, we were to pass him quietly.
Our files often heard that the lion by day in no way resembles the same animal by night. During the darkness, seeking his prey where he can find it, he will attack anything with the greatest ferocity; but during the day-time, it being his proper period for sleep, and being, besides, generally gorged with food, he seldom attacks man. In the present instance, I had little confidence in the effect of our fire, for our horses at their riders forced them to approach their dreaded enemy, because more and more alarmed and restive. The lion was, doubtless, the one I had heard roar in the distance the previous night, and he had been to the other side, seeking his food among the donkeys of the native tribes, near Teflent, from which he was now returning to his den.
Our files well closed up, we neared the lion, who showed no symptoms of fear; gazed at us, not savagely, but apparently with great curiosity. Then he moved his tail to and fro, like a large cat; and, as we neared him, he deliberately sat down on his hind-quarters, looking then, for all the world, like a queer-colored, large Newfoundland dog. We were now within 100 yards of him, and in single file, the horses' heads and tails were touching, he opened his huge mouth with a mighty yawn, and uttered, as he did so, a sound like a heavy sigh and a growl. This he did without rising, and in a most sleepy manner, as though he were supremely indifferent to our presence.
At this time our horses were terribly excited, and my own, a jet black Syrian barb, which had carried me many a mile over the plains of Wallachia and Roumelie, and who, from his intense love of mischief and fighting, I had long since christened "Basil-Bazouk," was now completely cowed, and though walking at a very slow pace, his black coat was so white with sweat that I could not resist the fancy that he had been in a fight. Trembling in every limb, my horse obeyed me, and as the rear files of our escort moved past, I contemplated the noble brute. He was a splendid male, of the color called by the natives the "black lion," and which, they say, is the most fierce and terrible of all lions. He was quiet enough just then, and did not even look at us. The jangling of the men's arms appeared to catch his attention; and it was indeed but a moment's space that he allowed me for contemplation, for a slight move on his part caused my horse to bound aside so as almost to unhorse me, and when I recovered my seat and my position, my horse lay down, and resting his head on two mounds of hay, he followed us with his eyes as we moved slowly away.
The Scotch Pig Iron Trade.—The quarterly report of Mr. Thompson, of Glasgow, states that in the year 1875, the Scotch iron trade was in a most prosperous condition, and the output made for 1875, amounts to the unprecedented total of 950,000 tons. The shipments and local consumption aggregated 915,000 tons, being the largest increase in any year except 1853, and showing an increase of 105,000 tons over last year, and of 72,000 tons over 1874. The statistics are as follows: In 1875, 950,000 tons; in 1874, 845,000 tons; in 1873, 773,000 tons; in 1872, 691,000 tons; in 1871, 619,000 tons; in 1870, 547,000 tons; in 1869, 475,000 tons; in 1868, 403,000 tons;
